NOTABLE

WOMEN IN LAW

FROM THE BOARD ROOM TO THE COURT ROOM, Crain's Notable Women in Law are seeking justice, setting precedent and managing high-profile cases for their corporate clients. They are mentors, champions and beacons of their community.

The honorees were selected by a team of Crain's Detroit Business editors based on their career accomplishments, track record of success in the field and mentorship of others, as outlined in a detailed nomination form.

Notable Women in Law was managed and written by Leslie D. Green.

DANIELLE BASS

Partner, Honigman LLP

University of Michigan Law School

A critical member of Honigman's technology transaction team, Danielle Bass focuses her practice on information technology, intellectual property, data and media with an emphasis on commercial transactions. Her work sometimes requires her to work alongside in-house legal teams.

"Danielle runs a fast-moving, complex portfolio of commercial and technology projects. One of the reasons this works so well is that the client's legal and business teams trust her judgment and all-around legal excellence," Honigman Partner Karl Hochkammer said.

Bass mentors students at her alma mater and lectures on matters involving IT and corporate law. She is also a council member of the Information Technology Law Section of the Michigan State Bar and a member of the Association of Corporate Growth Detroit.
